The script is almost finished. The producer of the Code is helping me and Lynne Carty out with the short. So far we only have the script but we have a good idea of our actors. Our movie, The Big Payback, is about revenge: Two kids battle with a bully for the best year of their lives. This is our first year in the film festival and we are really excited to be making a short. We are proud our fruit is eggplant, but we had originally planned on the tomato. Our short hopes to fool people into thinking it is a feature, much like the eggplant fools people into thinking it is a vegetable.

You may be wondering who this Graham fellow is, but it really isn't important to our film. Today we started our filming with Tony our bully and it was awesome. Except we had a few difficulties with Jeff the Janitor. His constant vacuuming seemed to come at every time we tried filming. But we had some luck with our props and camera handling. Kristen, our editor, came out of nowhere to help us today. Our group, Eggplant, made a lot of progress and we can't wait to film the rest of our movie!

So Kristen, Nick and I (Lynne) are stuck here waiting until 3:20 to film because Mike The Idiot Gross got hours...We're about halfway through filming but we only have 3 days left to shoot (almost our entire crew plays lax), so this week is going to be pretty busy. So far the shots are coming out good and our film fest. master Joe Brady approves. Tomorrow is deff. going to be the most intense day because we're shooting the crucial stairwell scene - we're hoping to get out before midnight. Today we're attempting to shoot the outside shots without our director, Michaela. Kristen and I hope that it goes quickly but that all depends on how ADHD Mike and Nick are (btw we don't really hate Mike but the kid did let us down today).P.S. Brendan O'Neil has proven to be the star extra of our short...kid's jacked.Here we go Eggplantttt.
